City crews tackle sand and grit after an icy winter

 Haley Ryan
Metro | Halifax

Halifax has traded in its snow blowers for brooms and vacuums.

After months of laying down sand on icy roads when salt wouldn't work in freezing temperatures, HRM's superintendent of streets and sidewalks said crews are now cleaning up more dust than usual thanks to lots of sand and grit left behind.

"We put out basically three times the amount of sand that we'd normally put out in the run of a year," Don Pellerine said Tuesday.

"That now has to be cleaned up."

He said roads in central Halifax, Dartmouth and Bedford that usually see salt were sanded instead, making for an unusually dusty spring season for the urban core.

Given the past winter has been pretty brutal, everybody pitching in will make a big difference.

Coun. Jennifer Watts

In addition to the city's six vacuum street sweepers, Pellerine said they had to bring in five other contracted sweepers and seven broom tractors.

There's also a lot of gravel and litter on islands in roads, Pellerine said, so crews of about 22 people have been but Pellerine said this year is unusual since his department typically handles street cleaning with what they have in-house.

The recent dry, warm weather may make Haligonians happy but it also creates clouds of dust, Pellerine said, which he hopes will be cleaned up next week.

"The nice, sunny weather hinders us in the dust department," he said.

The melting snowbanks may have revealed trash and litter around the city, but Pel-lerine said there isn't more than other years. He said they are making progress with a picker device and should be finished over the next two to three weeks.

Coun. Jennifer Watts said she has been hearing complaints from residents about the dust and grit left over.

She said getting through the cleanup is a combination of city crews doing their best and residents helping to sweep in front of their homes or organize a neighbourhood trash pickup.

TOURISM

Visitors happy facility is open again after extensive work

Lucie Edwardson
For Metro | Halifax

Eighty-one-year-old Emma Cuzzolino was one of the first guests to tour the newly renovated Pier 21 exhibit at the Canadian Museum of Immigration on Tuesday.

The visit marks the 60th anniversary of her arrival to Canada from Italy in 1955 on Conte Biancamano, at that very port.

"We like to call them our pilgrims," said Marie Chapman, CEO of the Canadian Museum of Immigration at Pier 21. "The ones who come back to celebrate their anniversary of arriving in Canada."

Chapman said that it was very important to the museum that they open as soon as possible for the public but specifically for those who celebrate their anniversaries of arrival and those of family members.

The museum closed last October to begin a long renovation process. The project is funded through the federal government, which promised $25 million over five years to upgrade the museum.

Chapman said that it is these kinds of stories they hope to continue to tell at Pier 21.

"We owe a huge debt to those people whose stories are now our treasures because we don't have the Mona Lisa or the Hope Diamond, but what we do have are stories of people who came to Canada and how someone's journeys affected them or affected their family, so it is pretty exciting."

Fiona Valverde, director of marketing, communications and development at Pier 21, said that it was amazing to see so many visitors on Day 1 who were excited by the exhibits and who had family connections.

"In our best hopes and dreams, that is what would have happened, and it happened on our first day."

NEW AT PIER 21

The renovations include:

- Touch screens allowing visitors to see more photographs, read more personal stories and watch authentic video, as well as interviews
- Scale replica of a colonist train car
- Scale replica of a ship's cabin
- Scale replica of a ship's dining room, where guests can learn proper table etiquette
- New Kenneth C. Rowe rental hall
- Exhibit hall opening June 25 telling the Canadian Immigration Story
- Wider floor plan, more wheelchair-accessible space

Suspicious package leads to evacuation

SAFETY

Halifax Law Courts one of four locations sent envelopes

Stephanie Taylor
Metro | Halifax

Dozens of employees at the Halifax Law Courts downtown were evacuated on Tuesday afternoon after suspicious packages were delivered to the building earlier in the morning.

Staff waiting outside the front doors said they left the building around 12:15 p.m. after an alarm was sounded following the delivery of what others at the scene said was a manila envelope, with a return address in Asia, which was deemed to be suspicious.

According to a police release issued Tuesday afternoon, an employee at the law courts contacted police after receiving two suspicious envelopes in the mail around 11:39 a.m.

The envelopes were kept in the reception area until several police officers and trucks arrived on the scene, lining Lower Water Street and blocking off traffic in the surrounding areas.

Firefighters and officers with the bomb-disposal unit entered the building through the underground public parking lot around 1 p.m.

Minutes later, they emerged with one officer carrying a clear container with a rectangular package wrapped in red plastic.

"The envelopes did not contain any harmful substances," the release said. "Officers are continuing to examine the contents and are attempting to determine the origin of the envelopes."

A group of firefighters, escorted by a sheriff from the law courts, later re-entered the building in order to ventilate the first floor, according to one employee.

Police then lifted the evacuation order and opened up traffic on Upper Water Street around 1:30 p.m.

The suspicious package at the Halifax Law Courts was one of four that arrived at the Bridgewater Justice Centre, Kentville Justice Centre and Truro Supreme Court on Tuesday, according to Nova Scotia Justice Department.

On Monday, four employees at the Amherst Justice Centre were released from hospital after complaining of nausea, dizziness and burning to the throat after receiving a similar suspicious package.

Earlier Tuesday morning, a spokesman with the department said there were no reports of illness in the latest incidents.

+ MORE DETAILS

The province's justice department released a statement on Tuesday saying the packages which came from Asia are connected to similar ones that were sent to courthouses in Manitoba in early April.

All of the packages that arrived in Manitoba tested negative for dangerous chemicals.

Partnership aims to bring events to city

The Halifax Convention Centre announced a new partnership with Digital Nova Scotia on Tuesday in the hopes of attracting more information and communication technology events to Halifax.

According to a release, the two organizations have been developing a list of national and international events they would like to bring to the region.

In the release, the president and CEO of Digital Nova Scotia said the new partnership will help grow the province's burgeoning tech industry and offer "greater global business opportunities."

The organization is already one of the sponsors for the Big Data for Productivity Conference, which is a three-day conference with international speakers in the digital industry coming to the region on Oct. 19-21.

They will also be teaming up with the convention centre to coordinate STEMfest, which is a science, technology, engineering and math-centric initiative, and set to be held at the new convention centre in 2018.

Food trucks back in season

VENDORS

Vehicles popping up as weather warms

Warm temperatures are (finally) here again and food trucks are popping up around Halifax for another season of mobile munchies.

According to the city, there are currently 12 vendors licensed to operate food vehicles, including Poppa Smoke's Hip Hot Hoagies which has seen business pick up in the last week as people finally felt spring arrive.

"The culture of it is certainly becoming a lot more popular," Poppa Smoke's owner and Nova Scotia Food Truck Association board member Ron Armstrong said Tuesday.

Armstrong said this will be the first full summer with his food truck since he started last July, but is already booked for events every weekend through to October.

There aren't any brand new trucks in Halifax this season Armstrong is aware of, but he said a couple new ones have sprung up in Truro and Amherst.

Food truck trailblazers The Food Wolf, who should be out in June, and Nomad Gourmet who are now out and about, will be joined by more recent additions like Ol' School Donuts, Halifax Press, Gecko Bus, Eats Mobile, and Tin Pan Alley on the truck circuit.

The culture of it is certainly becoming a lot more popular.

Ron Armstrong

Kyle MacMillan handed out pulled pork sandwiches, Reuben sandwiches, spicy fries and more through the truck window to the lunch crowd at Poppa Smoke's Wright Avenue location in Burnside Tuesday, as sunshine warmed the dusty parking lot. MacMillan said people are always excited about food trucks coming back since it's "always a change."

"Even if they always have the same menu, it's different people and they're going to make it a little differently," MacMillan said.

Both MacMillan and Armstrong said the food truck scene in Halifax is very tight-knit and supportive, with food swaps taking place now and then where trucks pull up beside each other and have workers trade a sandwich for a taco bowl or grilled cheese.

Dan MacInnis loves fish and chip trucks, but said he was looking forward to trying a Poppa Smoke's pulled pork sandwich as he waited by the truck Tuesday.

"I do like that aspect. Fresh air, sunshine, always nice," he said.

POLICE

Man reported missing

Police in Halifax are asking for the public's help locating a missing man who was last seen running from a Bedford gas station. On May 1 at 10:30 p.m., police were called to the Esso location at 1505 Bedford Highway in regards to a suspicious person.

According to police, Michael Slaunwhite, 30, went into the store while leaving his car running to purchase a drink.

Looking distraught, police say Slaunwhite ran from the store on foot and left behind his car. He ran across the street and behind several buildings that border the Sackville River.

The 30-year-old hasn't been in touch with family or friends since then. He was reported missing to police on Monday.

He is described as white with shaved brown hair and brown eyes. He was last seen wearing blue plaid pajama pants, a blue plaid work shirt with a black hood, a blue T-shirt with the logo of a boat and dark brown dress boots. He was also wearing a gold chain with a large cross around his neck.

Police don't believe he has been met with foul play, but are worried for his well-being.

Businessman roots for Rainmen

LOCAL ECONOMY

Board member still believes in team, despite forfeit

Kristen Lipscombe
Metro | Halifax

Local business leader Don Mills wasn't a big basketball fan, until the Halifax Rainmen came to town.

And he still is, despite the National Basketball League of Canada club's recent Game 7 forfeit fiasco.

The Corporate Research Associates chair and CEO said Tuesday the Rainmen can still be "an important part of revitalizing our downtown core," but the challenges of garnering fan and financial support are bigger than ever before.

"I actually saw it as improving the quality of life that we have in Halifax," Mills said of first learning about the Rainmen, who have made their home here for eight seasons.

Rainmen owner Andre Levingston, left, speaks with player Joey Haywood after a press conference Monday. Local business leader Don Mills says he still believes Levingston is the right person to make professional basketball successful in Halifax. JEFF HARPER/METRO

So after hearing owner and president Andre Levingston speak passionately about his team several years ago, Mills suggested he "think about having a local advisory board to connect him to the business community."

Mills is now a member of that unpaid board, which has been around for two and a half years. "Everyone's disappointed that we weren't able to play in the final game," he said, especially considering the "collective effort" to get them to the league championship this season.

Halifax Rainmen coaches and players didn't show up for the final game of their series last Thursday against the Windsor Express, citing safety concerns both on and off the court. The league awarded home team Express the championship title and slapped the visiting Rainmen with $90,000 fines and indefinite suspensions.

"We're not sure what the impact of ... last week's incident will have on the ability to attract investment," Mill said, adding corporate support "has actually been pretty decent under the circumstances."

"Some of the discussion points have to be around the pricing structure for the games and season tickets," Mill said, adding also up for consideration is "whether or not the league is operating in the right season."

He also believes Levingston is still the right person to make professional basketball successful in Halifax.

Levingston told Metro after a press conference Monday that no sponsors have pulled their support for the Rainmen.

"One day at a time," he said of rebuilding trust within the community.

Bill mandates sex-assault policy in higher education

SAFETY

NDP MLA wants all N.S. universities, colleges to act

Julia Manoukian
For Metro | Halifax

In Nova Scotia, home to 60,000 post-secondary students, only three universities have specific sexual-assault policies: Saint Mary's, Acadia and St. Francis Xavier.

A private bill introduced on Tuesday by NDP MLA Dave Wilson seeks to change that.

The Safer Universities and Colleges Act calls on all Nova Scotia universities and colleges to adopt specific sexual-assault policies.

"Either of two things will happen," Wilson said during a media conference at Province House. "(The government will) support our piece of legislation and move it forward, or they'll bring a piece of their own legislation to do the same."

He said the key parts of the bill are twofold: students must be part of developing the sexual-assault policy, and every four years the policy must, with student involvement, be reviewed.

Anika Roberts-Stahlbrand with the Canadian Federation of Students agrees.

Dave Wilson METRO FILE

"What's wonderful about this legislation is that it holds administrations accountable but it's not saying specifically what things will look like on each institution," she said.

Wilson said the bill follows a flurry of sexual-assault scandals on Nova Scotia university campuses — the 2013 Saint Mary's football team "rape chant" and Dalhousie Dentistry's misogynistic Facebook comments this past winter — but student groups have been pushing for legislation for some time.

John Hutton, incoming vice-president for Dalhousie's Student Union, said the union has been "very vocal" about the need for better resources.

Hutton suggested that under the new legislation, online forums would help victims come forward without going public, an aspect that holds many survivors back.

"Having that extra element of safety matters a lot," he said.

Currently, students must make a formal complaint through the Human Rights Equity and Sexual Harassment Prevention Office, which is part of the school administration. Anonymity is not an option.

THE CHANGES

Some key points of the proposed legislation:

- Each university and college will adopt an official sexual-assault policy with "significant" student input. It must be renewed, with student input, every four years.
- Each institution will set up complaint procedures, response protocols, specific training and prevention programs and 24-hour support for victims.

• The institutions will collect sexual-assault data and report it to the public, including the effectiveness of their programs.

Students attend a rally at Dalhousie University in January, calling for tougher penalties against those involved in the dentistry Facebook scandal. JEFF HARPER/METRO

Krista Mader wants to see some changes in the province that will make inbreeding dogs illegal.

Mader, who lives in the Nova Scotia community of Debert with her husband, four dogs and six cats, suspects her late pit bull, Ed, was inbred and that inbreeding caused him to turn on her three weeks ago.

"He wasn't a mean dog; he wasn't an aggressive dog," said Mader, while one of her Chihuahuas curled up behind her on the couch. "Training and having them socialized is so important with this breed, but when they're inbred, it's around 10 to 18 months when they start to turn on you. Having an inbred pit bull is the same as putting a purebred in the wrong hands."

Ed was a rescue who arrived in Mader's home at the beginning of December. She's had many people, including her own vet, comment on Ed's features, such as a smaller head, which is often a result of inbreeding.

"He was an amazing dog," said Mader, who teared up talking about the pit bull.

"He was my sidekick. We were so bonded. He slept in the kennel occasionally, but it got to the point where we would leave the door open and he would wake me up with slobbery kisses."

"I haven't been able to do anything as of yet," Mader said about having Ed's DNA and bloodline tested. "I will be claiming his body and getting an autopsy done, just as a formality to prove it."

Once she has the results of the testing, Mader plans to take her findings to her local MLA, with the hopes of getting legislation passed for inbreeding.

"I love all animals, not just pit bulls," she said. "I'm not just a pit bull advocate. If we had some legislation in place to have these people accountable, it might stop this. That I would love to see."

Regulating the service has made it illegal for a midwife to practise without a license, she explained, and licensing requires the purchasing of liability insurance, which is extremely costly.

That means that fewer midwives are practising independently than before the regulations were introduced.

Coupled with a lack of funding by the province, the outcome has been that only a handful of midwives throughout the province are currently working.

"There's been no movement forward, there's been no expansion," she said Tuesday.

Eddy said that hospitals on the South Shore and in Antigonish, as well as the IWK in Halifax are the only sites that offer midwifery services.

Presently, the IWK Health Centre only employs two part-time and three full-times midwives in total, Eddy added.

Fraudster hit 600, say police

IMMIGRATION

Toronto woman facing 73 charges in alleged scheme

More than 600 people around the world fell victim to an alleged immigration fraud scheme run by a Toronto woman, who now faces 73 charges in an expanding investigation.

Toronto police announced fresh charges against Imelda "Mel" Fronda Saluma, 46, on Tuesday, saying her victims have allegedly been defrauded of over $2.3 million.

"She did prey on people's hopes to get them over here, because everybody wants to get to a better place," said Det.-Const. Erwin Mendoza.

The probe into Saluma's activities began in October, after police were contacted with allegations that a large number of people had been defrauded by a Toronto-based recruiting agency dealing primarily with immigrant workers.

It was alleged that individuals, their family members and friends from other countries were recruited for jobs in Canada by the agency, identified as GoWest Jobs International.

Payment was allegedly requested so that positive documents, references and employment contracts could be provided to applicants, but police said those documents were fake.

An application would then allegedly be submitted to government agencies in the foreign countries on the victims' behalf.

The applicants would subsequently be denied entry to Canada due to the fraudulent documents submitted on their behalf, and the applicant would be banned from reapplying for two years, police said.

She did prey on people's hopes to get them over here.

Det.-Const. Erwin Mendoza

Saluma's alleged victims were based in Canada and six other countries, including the Philippines, Taiwan and Hong Kong.

Most of the victims were of Filipino descent.

"It's pretty tough for all of the foreign applicants to come up with the applicant fees that this company was looking," said Mendoza, adding that Saluma's agency allegedly asked for between $1,500 to $5,000 from its victims.

Anyone who thinks they may be a victim or know a victim is being asked to contact authorities.

COURT

Omar Khadr's bail remains in limbo

Any hopes Omar Khadr had of tasting freedom for the first time in almost 13 years were dashed Tuesday when an Alberta justice said she wanted more time to consider whether he should be released on bail.

Court of Appeal Justice Myra Bielby said she would decide Thursday whether to grant the federal government's request to keep him behind bars despite a lower court order that he be freed. Khadr showed little emotion as he was led from court, but one of his lawyers, Dennis Edney, was disappointed with the decision.

"Of course, I'd like to grab him, throw him in the car, take him home," Edney said outside court.

At issue is an April 24 order from Court of Queen's Bench Justice June Ross that Khadr, 28, should be given bail pending his appeal of his war crimes conviction in the United States.

He was due for release as early as Tuesday under Ross's order and Edney had arrived with a bag of clothes, fully prepared to take Khadr home. THE CANADIAN PRESS

LAND CLAIM

Nunavut to get $250M in lawsuit settlement

Ottawa is to pay an Inuit land-claim group more than $250 million to settle a lawsuit and improve training for Inuit to enter the territorial civil service.

The payment is included in a previously announced deal for more than $300 million that ends a nine-year-old claim against the federal government by Nunavut Tunngavik Inc., the group that oversees the Nunavut land claim.

"There's a lot of interest in the Arctic now and we have a large, untrained Inuit work force," Cathy Towtongie, NTI president, said Monday.

The land claim guaranteed that Inuit would hold the same percentage of jobs in the territorial government that they do in the general population — about 85 per cent. But the level has been stuck at about 50 per cent for years.

A conciliator's report concluded in 2005 that the reason has been Ottawa's consistent underfunding of education in the territory.

Retired justice Thomas Berger found that underfunding has resulted in graduates that are literate in neither English nor Inuktitut. He recommended a bilingual education program paid for through an extra $20 million a year from the government.

NTI filed its lawsuit, claiming $1-billion damages, after the report's release. That was based on wages the group said the Inuit could have earned if they'd been educated well. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canadian veterans honoured in Netherlands

It was 70 years ago Tuesday that the guns fell nearly silent along the Canadian and British lines in Holland.

The war in northwestern Europe was almost over and Pte. Frank Graham, who'd fought with the Canadian 1st Division all through Sicily, Italy and Holland, found himself thunderstruck.

"When I heard they'd given up, I thought, no they don't," said Graham, 92.

The BBC announced the ceasefire the night before, on May 4, 1945, yet Graham said he'd been disappointed by rumours before.

Seven decades on, Graham was part of a sentimental parade of veterans who rolled past a reviewing stand in vintage army vehicles outside of the hotel where the capitulation was made official.

As was evident on their faces, it was a bittersweet moment for the old soldiers in this tranquil, leafy town as they mingled with actors dressed in the uniforms they used to wear and rode in trucks and jeeps they had once

Heavy thunder threatened Tuesday's parade and even cancelled a photo opportunity Prime Minister Stephen Harper had planned with the veterans.

It was far cry from the breezy, cold day in 1945 when Col.-Gen. Johannes Blaskowitz, commander of all German forces in the Netherlands and Denmark, showed up at the wrecked Hotel de Wereld.

Canadian Lt.-Gen. Charles Foulkes accepted the surrender in a simple ceremony, which was to be followed two days later by the more formal unconditional surrender of all German forces accepted by Allied supreme commander U.S. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower at Reims, France.

Despite the general ceasefire on May 5, 1945 in the Canadian sector, troops continued to die for at least three more days, said Canadian War Museum historian Jeff Noakes. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Family of man who died during ER wait can sue

Manitoba's highest court has ruled that the family of a man who died during a 34-hour hospital emergency room wait can sue the health authority for a breach of charter and privacy rights.

Lower courts struck out the heart of the lawsuit filed by the family of Brian Sinclair, ruling his loved ones couldn't sue because those rights died with him in 2008. Lawyers for Sinclair's family argued it was absurd that the family of a man who died because he didn't receive proper care couldn't sue because he was dead.

After eight months, the Manitoba Court of Appeal said that the lawsuit should be allowed to proceed.

Vilko Zbogar, one of the family's lawyers, said the ruling has important implications for the evolution of charter law, as well as the family's pursuit of justice.

"It's important to the family to have vindication for Brian Sinclair's death and it's very important to them to hold the institutions who were responsible accountable for their conduct," he said.

I see no imaginable reason to borrow such a discredited and outdated principle of the common law to the modern age.

Justice Chris Mainella

The appeal court also restored the family's right to sue the Winnipeg Regional Health Authority for disclosing private health information about Sinclair after his death.

Robert Sinclair, Brian Sinclair's cousin, said the family won't stop trying to hold health authorities to account "for their shameful conduct both before and after his death."

Alberta's election twists, turns

POLITICS

Tory dynasty gets toppled by unprecedented dissatisfaction

April 7: Premier Jim Prentice announces in Edmonton that he has visited the lieutenant-governor to ask for a provincial election on May 5. Under Alberta law, an election wasn't supposed to be held until early 2016, but many believe Prentice hopes to take advantage of an opposition in disarray. He's running on a tough-love budget that increases taxes and runs a record $5-billion deficit.

April 8: Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi criticizes Prentice for spending $30 million to hold an early election after refusing weeks earlier to restore $200,000 in funding for more child death investigations.

April 19: NDP Leader Rachel Notley takes a page from former Tory premier Peter Lougheed as she unveils her party's election campaign platform in Edmonton. Notley says corporations that did well during the boom should be expected to shoulder more of the burden during lean times.

April 23: In a flinty televised debate, Prentice trades barbs with Notley and literally turns his back on Wildrose Leader Brian Jean. The highlight comes when Prentice incorrectly says the NDP want to raise Alberta's 10 per cent corporate tax rate to 20 per cent instead of the 12 per cent outlined in the NDP budget plan. He mock commiserates with Notley that "math is difficult" as she tries to set the record straight.

April 24: Prentice dismisses the possibility of the political left surging to power, saying Alberta is "not an NDP province." Notley says "Albertans will decide what sort of province Alberta is."

April 25: Alberta's justice minister steps down. Prentice says he learned that "legal proceedings have commenced between Jonathan Denis and his estranged wife." Prentice says he still has faith in Denis as a PC candidate.

of soliciting a prostitute is acceptable because he owned up to what he did.

April 30: Former premier Ralph Klein's daughter, Angie Klein, says her father may have led the Progressive Conservatives for 14 years, but it's time for a new government. She releases a YouTube video urging Albertans to vote for the NDP.

May 4: The day before the vote, the PCs are forced to address lurid allegations surrounding Denis' failed marriage. A judge lifted a ban that had kept from the public allegations that Denis kneed his estranged wife, Breanna Palmer, in the face, tampered with her car's brakes and threw temper tantrums while their marriage fell apart earlier in the year. Justice Craig Jones says he's satisfied Palmer is "not in danger of family violence."

RESULTS

The NDP won its first majority government in Alberta by toppling the Progressive Conservative colossus that has dominated the province for more than four decades.

The party under Leader Rachel Notley swept all 19 constituencies in Edmonton on Tuesday, made inroads in previously barren NDP territory in Calgary and Lethbridge and added several seats in rural areas.

The Wildrose party was poised to take second place to form the official Opposition, while Premier Jim Prentice and his battered PCs trailed in third place.

Prentice, Wildrose Leader Brian Jean and Liberal Leader David Swann were all elected. Prentice later announced his resignation from the legislature and as party leader.

ELECTIONS

P.E.I. a warning to old guard

A strong election showing Monday by third parties that once struggled for slivers of Prince Edward Island's vote is a warning to Tories and Liberals that generations-old political loyalties are fading, say political commentators.

History professor Ian Dowbiggin of the University of Prince Edward Island says the gains made by the NDP and the Green party, which each won about 11 per cent of the popular vote, represents a historic shift that won't be easily erased.

"When you get over 20 per cent of the total number of votes, it's got to reflect a changing of political allegiance, especially among young people," he says.

"The people who were voting yesterday for the Greens and the NDP weren't simply old hippies with pony tails voting their heart."

The Liberals won their third straight majority under rookie premier Wade MacLauchlan, dropping from 20 seats to 18, while the Tories took eight seats and the Green party claimed its first seat in the legislature.

Dowbiggin says the Liberal win shows the electorate is comfortable with the former university president, the province's first openly gay premier.

He also says the Greens and NDP still face huge obstacles in fundraising, candidate recruitment and a first-past-the-post system that works against some parties.

Quebec toughens smoking laws

Ten years after it prohibited smoking in bars and restaurants, Quebec has introduced sweeping legislation that would extend the ban to patios and subject increasingly popular e-cigarettes to the same rules as other tobacco products.

Flavoured tobacco would also be outlawed, as would smoking in a vehicle if someone under 16 is present.

"We know that tobacco is the worst product that you can take," junior health minister Lucie Charlebois said Tuesday after tabling the legislation.

"I saw my father die of lung cancer because he was smoking too much. I don't have to explain to you how horrible it was."

"We want to be the leaders in Canada and around the world in terms of less prevalence of tobacco."

If it becomes law, Bill 44 would see e-cigarettes prohibited inside institutions and public buildings.

The bill seeks to prohibit the sale of all tobacco products having a flavour or aroma, including menthol cigarettes and cigarillos. Electronic cigarettes are exempt because they're used by smokers seeking to end their addiction.

"I do not want to take away the opportunity for people to use this product to quit smoking," said Charlebois, herself an ex-smoker.

The province also wants to ban smoking on bar and restaurant patios and within nine metres of a public building — unless that distance leaves smokers on the street.

Bill 44 will be subject to consultations. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Video shows migrants fleeing stricken dinghy

MEDITERRANEAN

Several feared drowned, as many travellers cannot swim

Young men piled over each other, some shimmying up ropes dangling from the towering rescue ship and others falling into the churning sea. Women and children were the last off the stricken dinghy during a chaotic Mediterranean rescue in which at least five migrants died and more were feared drowned.

Dramatic footage shot by a seaman aboard the Maltese freighter showed the weekend rescue of more than 100 West Africans aboard the flimsy boat off the coast of Libya. Survivors were brought Tuesday to the Sicilian port of Catania.

The video highlights the danger of marine rescue, where safety and tragedy too often lie just moments apart. With tens of thousands trying to cross the sea on small boats launched by human traffickers from Libya — and hundreds dying in the attempt — the question of how best to save migrants from drowning has taken centre stage in Europe.

Crew members interviewed by The Associated Press said everyone aboard the cargo ship Zeran had undergone rescue training. But while a previous rescue several weeks ago hap-

Dramatic footage emerged Tuesday showing a Mediterranean Sea rescue of migrants on a sinking rubber boat. pened calmly without any loss of life, on Sunday elation at the prospect of being saved quickly turned to panic.

Unaware that they would be thrown a ladder, frantic migrants trampled over one another to reach the ropes that were meant to hold it in place, with some dangling precariously as they clambered along the lines to reach the tall freighter.

Someone grabbed onto the rope. All the other people started pushing to try to save themselves but the people started falling in the water.

Astoy Fall Dia, 24, a migrant from Senegal

Some jumped or fell overboard to catch lifesavers tossed into the water by crew members. Others emptied jerry cans of gasoline to use as floats, as the dinghy — already deflated at the front — began taking in water.

"Easy! Easy!" implored a crew member from Zeran's deck.

"There was the big ship there, and they threw down ropes," Astoy Fall Dia, a 24-year-old migrant from Senegal, told The Associated Press after disembarking from the cargo ship.

"Someone grabbed onto the rope. All the other people started pushing to try to save themselves but the people started falling in the water."

Dia said she survived because she stayed close to the dinghy and because she knew how to swim — unlike most of the migrants who come from poor African countries.

Five bodies were recovered from inside the dinghy, floating amid garbage and water that had seeped in, though it wasn't clear if they died in the final rush to be rescued, as one crew member maintained, or during the crossing.

At least another five to nine people fell into the water and drowned, said the seaman who shot the video, though one man floating away with the current and clinging to a lifesaver was rescued by crew on a Zeran life-boat.

The seaman and other crew members spoke on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media.

NEPAL EARTHQUAKE

Police recover 60 bodies

Emergency workers have recovered the bodies of 60 people — including nine foreigners — who were killed when Nepal's earthquake triggered a mudslide that buried a village in the scenic Langtang Valley popular with tourists.

Residents of the village, also called Langtang, said Tuesday that as many as 200 people could have been killed by tons of earth and mud unleashed in the devastating April 25 quake.

"The entire village was wiped out by the mudslide. There were some 60 houses there, but they were all buried under rubble. It will be impossible to recover all the bodies," said Gautam Rimal, the top government official in the Rasuwa district.

The Langtang Valley, about 60 kilometres north of Nepal's capital, Kathmandu, is now about a two-day hike from the nearest town because the landslide has blocked nearby roads.

While helicopters allow easy access, they remain in short supply because of aid missions across parts of Nepal.

The April 25 earthquake killed more than 7,500 people and injured more than 14,000 as it flattened mountain villages and destroyed buildings and archaeological sites in Kathmandu.

Authorities say up to one-third of Kathmandu's residents have left since the quake. In the first days, bus stations were jammed with people fearing aftershocks or trying to get home to relatives in devastated villages. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Producing power at home should be worth our while

THE SCIENCE

Stephanie Orford

On Thursday, Tesla Motors CEO Elon Musk announced the company's latest foray into renewable-energy technology: the Tesla Powerwall, a wall-mounted battery for homes or businesses to store energy for later use.

This could be the beginning of a new energy future for Canada and the world. And at about $3,000-$3,500 US for a Powerwall, plus wiring and installation, they're attainable for many homeowners. The batteries can be recycled using Tesla's program for its existing electric vehicle batteries. Canadian firm NRStor plans to start selling Powerwalls in Canada in 2016.

Canadian policy-makers and energy utilities need to harness the green-power generation and storage potential of Canadian households by giving middle-class Canadians incentives, such as tax credits and feed-in tariffs, to produce and store green energy. The cost of solar panels has dropped a hundredfold since 1977, with wind and other renewables following suit, making household energy harvesting increasingly appealing to Canadians who want to live green while reducing their costs.

"The decentralization of energy is where the future is going," says Jesika Briones, business development manager at the Advanced Energy Centre.

Currently there are lots of limitations on Canadians who want to generate their own electricity. Canada has put tariffs on Chinese solar panels, making them more expensive and harder to import. B.C., Quebec and other provinces allow net metering (when property owners provide the grid with home-generated renewable energy, in exchange for a reduced bill). Only Ontario actually pays people who feed the grid.

That incentive encourages people to generate as much green energy as they can, because they'll get paid for it. A country of green energy-generating households could power industry and public facilities without as much need for fossil fuels. In 2012, fossil fuels still made up 74 per cent of Canada's energy consumption, the World Bank says.

A home battery system is "the missing piece," as Tesla calls it, to our green future. It will let households buy from the grid at off-peak hours when it's least expensive and sell to the grid at peak hours when it's most needed. Versions of this arrangement are already in place in Germany and some American states.

According to a 2013 National Academy of Sciences study of electric vehicle batteries, when you use renewable electricity to charge them, the results are still better for the environment than fossil fuels.

"Combined with solar PV (photovoltaics, a solar-energy technology), Tesla has made energy independence not only more accessible but also more desirable," Briones said.

A home battery, Tesla says, is the missing piece to our green future.

The new energy market would create jobs and opportunities for Canadian companies to innovate. A few, like electronics maker Eguana Technologies and green-battery company Electrovaya, are already on the forefront. But we need more incentives before household green-power generation and storage can go viral.

A Kardashian selfie book: give the people what they want

There's a lot of blustering in the media about Kim Kardashian's already bestselling book and plenty of feigned surprise at its popularity.

But that just shows how often the media speaks from the pulpit and not the crowd.

Kardashian's new book of selfies, Selfish, has caused so much wheezing on narcissism that holier-than-thou writers must be hoarse by now.

They're wasting their breath. Kardashian is only an expert manipulator of the fame our society gleefully hands her.

Hundreds of fans camped outside a New York bookstore Tuesday — including two 21-year-old women who drove all the way from Washington — to get an autograph scrawled across this photographic memoir of parties, workouts and nudes.

Meanwhile, the media has lined up to gawk at Selfish's hubris, a reaction notably absent to Chloë Sevigny's recent photography book, called Chloë Sevigny, featuring photos of her and released by the same publisher.

In his review, the Guardian's critic revelled in describing Kardashian's "carnal fullness" and "curvaceous flesh."

Jonathan Jones deemed it "guilt-free looking" and he equated Selfish to the end of photography as art.

"Selfish is the final grave marker of that aesthetic delusion," Jones wrote.

At least he defended celebrity selfies. They give "an illusion of intimacy that is priceless in an age that cherishes authenticity."

Others, distressed by her fame, have gone straight for Kardashian's jugular. As the Toronto Star's Vinay Menon wrote: "This is a woman with Type V blood, as in vanity."

Menon mocked her lack of talent and her use of the word "skank" in her earlier attempt at writing, in the novel Dollhouse.

"I have no answers today, people," he wrote in the voice of a doomsday preacher. "Just an unsettling, irrational feeling that soon, very soon, the skanks will be coming for all of us."

Well now, that doesn't sound so bad. But come on, branding her a "skank" is not a very sophisticated take on the sex appeal that drives her fame. It's a sexist slur that paints all cleavage selfies with the same skank brush.

It also accuses Kardashian of somehow hoodwinking 31.5 million Instagram followers into loving her. She's only feeding our own hunger for titillation. She's unapologetic about flaunting her body, and I can respect that.

"Look at my boobies! Look at my butt!" John McMurtrie wrote in a mock-Kardashian voice in the San Francisco Chronicle.

Just what the Doc ordered

Actor talks perks of indies ahead of new film, Back to the Future anniversary

Steve Gow
Metro | Life

It's a big year for character actor Christopher Lloyd. After all, a film he made decades ago is having a rebirth of sorts. With the 30th anniversary of Back to the Future approaching this fall, there are a number of celebrations, documentaries and tributes planned.

"I don't keep up that well with it. I don't keep up that well with anything," laughed the 76-year-old star recently. "(But) films don't usually have that, so I'm embracing it."

And so he should be. After all, the 1985 time-travel comedy that spawned two hit sequels was not only a success in its day, but it also has only seemed to gather more fans as the years advanced. In fact, Family Guy creator Seth McFarlane was such an admirer he asked Lloyd to make a cameo appearance as his "Doc" Brown character in last year's hit comedy A Million Ways to Die in the West.

"So many people have come up to me and said they grew up with Back to the Future; that it shaped their lives to the extent that they chose to be an engineer or a physicist or something along those lines because of the effect of the films," admitted Lloyd. "It feels good to be part of something that's meant so much to so many people."

Indeed, with Doc Brown, the comedy's excitable, white-haired inventor,

Christopher Lloyd and director April Mullen on the set of the Canadian-made crime thriller 88. CONTRIBUTED

Lloyd has crafted one of cinema's most iconic figures. So unquestionably, he must be looking forward to "participating in some of these events" to celebrate it. First, however, he is just as eager to discuss his unlikely casting in the Canadian-made crime thriller 88.

"Here was a guy that nobody has given me an opportunity to be so I just jumped on it," explained Lloyd of the film in which he plays a crime boss at the centre of one woman's quest to score revenge for her lover's death.

"Whether it's a dramatic role, farce or comedy or melodrama, I have the same task — to make the character real so when the audience sees me, they understand and relate," said Lloyd of 88's seedy strip-club character. "That's kind of what I do regardless of the type of character it is."

While that range has assured Lloyd of an endearing on-screen longevity in Hollywood ever since his debut in 1975's classic One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, the veteran actor now insists he looks forward as much to the freedom that comes with making indie projects like 88 as he does blockbuster hits like Back to the Future.

"It's nice getting away from Hollywood," admitted Lloyd. "You do a film in Hollywood and men in suits are hovering; they're there second-guessing you and it's good to get away, be independent and feel relaxed." 88 screens across Canada on Wednesday as part of Canadian Indie Film Series.

Macaroni and cheese gets a healthy overhaul made with a base of cauliflower, spinach or tomatoes. ISTOCK

TWIST ON A CLASSIC

Comfort food with a crust

WORD OF MOUTH

Theresa Albert
myfriendinfood.com

Last year it was grilled cheese; this year it's mac and cheese getting the red carpet overhaul.

A Mac & Cheese Festival coming up next month in Toronto promises to bring together "savvy cooks and food entrepreneurs" in order to reinvent this comfort food.

Most cooks seem to take a "go big or go home" approach to the dish — adding white chocolate, for instance, or combining it with a pot of chili.

I'm not a huge fan of messing with a classic by mixing in miscellany, but there is so much fun you can have adding a crust.

Keep the full-fat, sharp cheese taste in the traditional homemade recipes (or cheat with boxed product) but add a veggie bottom.

Here are a few bottoms to try:

Cauli Crust

• Grate 2 cups steamed cauliflower into a bowl, stir in a beaten egg and 1/2 cup of Parmesan cheese and press into casserole dish.

• Bake until it forms a crispy crust and then top with cooked mac and cheese to warm together.

Go Greek

• Mix together 3 cups of thawed frozen spinach, 1 tbsp oregano, 2 cloves of garlic, 1 cup crumbled feta. Press into casserole dish and top with mac and cheese and bake until heated through.

Kiss it Italian

• Slice 3 or 4 ripe tomatoes into thick slices and lay into casserole dish.

• Place a handful of basil into the pan, drizzle with balsamic vinegar and top with cooked mac and cheese. Bake to heat through. Invert onto a platter.

Nothing says love like a creamy casserole, but it doesn't have to be all fatty carbs all the time!

HIS FAVE ROLES

Over four decades, Christopher Lloyd has starred in more than 100 films and series. We reflect on just three of his most famous roles:

The Addams Family (Uncle Fester):

"At first I didn't see how it could be because I'm kind of tall, I'm kind of slim and Fester's a sight gag," recalled Lloyd. "If I'm channel-surfing and one of The Addams Family films comes up, I don't move any further — I just sit there and enjoy it."

Back to the Future ("Doc" Brown):

"I loved his excitement about discovery. Doc Brown has got a head that is constantly coming out with new ways to do things," said Lloyd. "He fell down in his bathroom one day and hit his head on the toilet seat and, bang — he (invents) the flux capacitor. That's so cool!"

One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest (Taber):

"It was my first film," said Lloyd. "Jack Nicholson was a big idol of mine before Cuckoo's Nest from his previous work (and) I couldn't believe it. It was just a momentous moment in my life."

MET GALA FASHION

China-themed ball brings out the best and the barely dressed

Never let it be said that Rihanna doesn't know how to make an entrance.

On a night when big stars were a dime a dozen — try George and Amal Clooney, Lady Gaga, Madonna and Cher — the pop singer still managed to steal the show and conquer the red carpet at the Met Gala when she swooped in wearing a fur-trimmed yellow cape with floral swirls of gold and a train so long it required three wranglers.

The ensemble came with a little pink mini-dress underneath, and a sparkling tiara. In keeping with the evening's theme — China, and its artistic influence on the West — the outfit was designed by Beijing-based designer Guo Pei, whose sumptuous designs are on display in the

As befitting a star — or fashion royalty — Rihanna commanded premium attention on the carpet by being one of the very last to arrive. But compared to Beyoncé, she was an early bird.

that many photographers were giving up and leaving. She was highly photogenic, though, in a sheer, bejeweled Givenchy Haute Couture gown by Riccardo Tisci.

Deep, ruby reds, shimmering golds and other jewel tones dominated the colour scheme as the multitudes of invited celebrities embraced this year's China inspiration. There were sequins aplenty, and embroidery was everywhere.

One of the first to arrive was the gala's longtime head, Vogue editor Anna Wintour, who shimmered in an orange-and-red floral couture gown from Chanel.

She was followed by a succession of stars of film, music, fashion, TV and sports unrivaled anywhere but perhaps the Oscars.

Katy Perry wore Moschino and sported a new Kris Jenner-inspired pixie cut.

One of the world's most watched women, Amal Clooney, arrived on her husband's arm in a tiered ruby-red gown by John Galliano.

Jennifer Lopez bared a lot more skin — actually, more than most, in a red Versace gown with sheer side panels.

Kim Kardashian opted for sheer, too, in a white gown with a feathery train by Peter Dundas for Roberto Cavalli, the designer's first for the house. Little sister Kendall Jenner opted for Calvin Klein, sparkling in green with sexy laces on each side. And Justin Bieber showed up in a black jacket slithering with gold dragons, by Balmain.

Ryan Gosling isn't necessarily a fan of the myriad Internet memes devoted to him, but the guy's not made of stone, OK? When he got word that Ryan McHenry, the Vine user who popularized the bizarre Ryan Gosling Won't Eat his Cereal videos, had passed away this week after a two-year battle with cancer, Gosling sprung into action, posting his own Vine featuring him finally — finally! — eating some cereal. "My heart goes out to all of Ryan McHenry's family and friends," Gosling tweeted. "Feel very lucky to have been apart of his life in some small way." NED EHRBAR/METRO four-wheel drive. Depending on the configuration, towing capacity goes as high as 3,175 kilograms.

No truck really drives "truck-like" anymore, but the Canyon is very well done. Its steering is well-weighted — light enough for easy manoeuvring, but weighted enough for confidence — and when the going gets mucky, it can be dialled into four-wheel on the fly. The V6 engine is smooth, and with just enough of a growl to satisfy fans who want a truck, not a car.

The interior is a scaled-down version of the full-size GMC Sierra, and you can order such upscale options as navigation, forward collision alert, lane departure warning, and leather seats. A nice touch is that while many manufacturers include all of the available option buttons, and blank out the ones that weren't ordered, GM installs just the right number of controls. It's a small thing, but the dash doesn't look like you "cheated out" with all those blank buttons.

Also borrowed from GM's bigger trucks is the simple but effective bumper step that gives you a quick leg up into the box. A factory spray-in bedliner is available, too.

There are still a few contenders in this segment, but for performance and comfort, I think the Canyon is currently the best of the bunch.

FORD MOTOR COMPANY

Car-people link drives cultural anthropologist

AUTO PILOT

Mike Goetz

Some people have such deep connections with their vehicles they made sure they got buried in them.

There was that California socialite and her 1963 Ferrari 330 America, that former Second World War army sergeant and his 1994 Chevrolet Corvette, and that 90-year-old gentleman from South Carolina and his 1973 Pontiac Catalina.

Michael Thomas studies this car-people connection for a living. He is Ford Motor Company's first on-staff cultural anthropologist. Speaking over the phone from Ford's worldwide HQ in Dearborn, Mich., he noted that some objects do more than their primarily design role; they cross over into the cultural realm and become important in how we associate as humans.

This cultural role of vehicles is what deepens our connection to them, says Thomas. "Cars help individuals exert themselves in the social world."

Examples of how vehicles implicate themselves into an individual's social world are many and varied, and differ throughout the world. Here in North America, the classic ones are cars as extensions of an individual's personality (be it speedy or quirky or whatever), as status symbols, and as one of the last bastions of personal space.

But Ford is also interested in finding the more nuanced ways vehicles implicate themselves into our lives, and particularly in areas of the world where car ownership is a relatively new phenomenon.

Thomas has been working at Ford for two years now. He and his team spent the first year just gathering data around the globe. How does one gather cultural anthropological data? By shadowing people, from the time they get up to the time they're done for the night, for several days in a row, much like a reality show, just without the cameras, fake drama, and C-list celebrities.

"The idea is to triangulate all the data, not just the car-related data."

One of the subjects the team followed was a new dad in China, whose passion is extreme sports. His vehicle is very important to him, because it had to fit his new role as guardian and protector, and yet still embody a sliver of his former edgy self. So he chose a safe but sporty-enough vehicle, that he envisioned himself using, to navigate his family in and around the scary traffic conditions in urban China — a new form of extreme sport, if you will.

"We found that people use vehicles to help them through their transitions," adds Thomas.

Another subject was a sari salesperson in India. As per cultural protocol, as soon as the transaction shifted to the payment phase, she had to hand off the transaction to a male colleague. The rest of her life was like that, too, always deferring to male authority. But in her car, she took up the same amount of space as anyone else on the road. It was her way of to gain agency not permitted in other areas of her life.

"She didn't have to defer to anyone on the road. She was equal."

Tiguan: Buy with confidence

USED VEHICLE

After checks, 2009 to 2015 models equal solid purchase

Competing with the likes of the Honda CR-V, Toyota RAV4 and Ford Escape with an eye for German-engineered quality, refinement and luxury, the Volkswagen Tiguan crossover hit the market for model-year 2009, and has enjoyed a loyal following of owners ever since.

Tiguan appears a fairly solid used crossover bet, though a few checks are advised. Start with a scan of the engine's computer at a VW dealer: many owners have reported issues with ignition coil packs, sensors or even a buildup of valve gunk causing poor performance, sporadic power delivery and other issues, most of which will either cause a check-engine light to illuminate, or a 'trouble code' to be stored in the engine's computer. A computer scan is fast and cheap, and can reveal a multitude of potential problems.

Confirm proper operation of the Bluetooth system, all steering-wheel mounted controls, motorized seat adjustments and the climate control system, ensuring each works as expected. Confirm proper operation of the Tiguan's xenon lighting system too, if equipped. Xenon lights last longer than halogen lights, though they're pricier to replace when they do burn out.

Some owners have reported issues with the Tiguan's cooling system, so have a VW mechanic inspect the level and condition of its engine coolant, and check for signs of coolant leakage, which could indicate a worn water pump or other issues.

JUSTIN PRITCHARD FOR METRO

What owners like

Common owner praise-points include a quiet ride, comfortable cabin, taut handling, upscale interior trimmings and an overall feel of solid quality. On models with the 4Motion AWD system, all-weather traction is rated highly, too.

What owners dislike

A high upfront price, sometimes clumsy navigation interface, and a small cargo hold requiring owners to fold rear seats flat to stow away more cargo. Furthermore, despite Tiguan's sporty engine, some owners take issue with its requirement to be fed high-octane fuel.

Features

Targeting a shopper who seeks handling, comfort and performance, Tiguan's available feature content included a panoramic sunroof, heated leather, xenon lights, Bluetooth, navigation, up-level Dynaudio audio systems, power seats, keyless engine start and plenty more.

The verdict

Tiguan's most common issues seem easy to diagnose and repair, and they're all reported fairly infrequently. Thanks to Volkswagen's experience with the 2.0T powerplant and 4Motion system, shoppers can take confidence in buying a used copy that passes a basic mechanical and computer scan at a VW dealer.

Carmaker unveils new 2016 RAV4

Japanese automaker Toyota took the wraps off a new 2016 RAV4 hybrid small tall wagon at the recent New York Auto Show, making it Toyota's eighth model to sport a gas-electric powertrain. The vehicle's edgier design will be shared with the conventional RAV4 for the new model year. Sporting on-demand all-wheel-drive, the hybrid will deliver more horsepower and better fuel economy than its conventional sibling, said Bob Carter, senior vice-president of Toyota's U.S. operations, although he did not provide specific figures. Carter expressed confidence that some buyers will opt for the RAV4 hybrid, even with gasoline languishing at just barely $3 US a gallon. Also in the U.S., RAV4 sales surged 28 per cent in March to 25,243 units. "We are supply constrained" on the model, Carter said.

LeBron James leaned against a stanchion and spun a ball on his index finger. As it rotated, his brain seemed to be turning just as quickly. He's plotting his next move against the Bulls.

After losing Game 1 of their Eastern Conference semifinal series to Chicago, James and the Cleveland Cavaliers regrouped on Tuesday to watch film, work on outside shooting and devise a better defensive scheme to stop a pick-and-roll play the Bulls executed to near perfection during their 99-92 victory. James came within one assist of a tri-

Post-Olympic seasons usually are lacking and Chan wasn't super impressed by what he saw.

"Nothing too special — no offence," he said. "It was a very exciting competition, of course technically everyone did all the quads (quadruple jumps), but we've had two, three seasons of these quads coming back into the men's field, so that's to be expected now."

"At this point, especially myself, I look to a skater who is pushing the boundaries program-wise," Chan hopes to do just that. "I want to skate a program that I can get off the ice and say 'I'm proud of what I just did.' I hope it's something people will look back in years to come, or coaches can play a program to skaters to say 'This is what it takes to be a champion.'

"That's really my goal, not necessarily winning a medal. I think I'm beyond that in my career."

Chan's return is good news for Canadian men's skating. With Chan out, and Olympian Kevin Reynolds struggling with both skate issues, then a hip injury, 16-year-old Nam Nguyen won the national title and went on to finish fifth at the world championships. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Pacquiao hit with class-action lawsuit over injury

Chicago ahead 3-0 in Western Conference semifinal

Patrick Kane scored in the first period for Chicago, and Corey Crawford and the Blackhawks made the superstar's goal stand up for a 1-0 win over the Minnesota Wild on Tuesday.

Chicago took a commanding 3-0 lead in the Western Conference semifinal series. Game 4 is in Minnesota again on Thursday.

Kane has six goals and five assists in nine playoff games, bouncing back just fine from the broken collarbone that kept him out of the last quarter of the regular season.

Crawford made 30 saves, giving him 90 on 94 shots in the three games. Stifled time after time on chance after chance, the Wild have scored just once over their last 150-plus minutes on the ice.

GAME 3 In St. Paul

The Blackhawks last led a playoff series 3-0 in the Western Conference finals against San Jose in 2010, when they went on to win the Stanley Cup.

An overnight power outage softened the ice, sending the arena scrambling to restore the surface in time for the morning skates. The skating conditions were back to normal by nightfall, and there was sure no slowing down the Blackhawks.

On a first-period power play, Patrick Sharp centred the puck to Andrew Shaw, who poked it just enough to his left where Kane skated unabated up the wing. The 26-year-old speedster snapped a low shot that slipped past Devan Dubnyk's pads to quiet the buzz in the crowd.

RECIPE Chicken with Rice, Green Olives and Tomato Sauce

EAT LIGHT AT HOME

Rose Reisman
rosereisman.com
@rosereisman

Ready in

Prep time: 10 minutes
Cook time: 36 minutes
Serving Size: 4

Ingredients

- 3 tsp vegetable oil, divided
- 4 medium chicken quarters cut into thighs and drumsticks
- 1/4 cup all-purpose flour
- 2 tsp minced fresh garlic
- 1 1/2 cups chopped onion
- 1 1/2 cups chopped green bell peppers
- 1 cup white rice
- 1 can (19 oz) crushed tomatoes
- 1 1/4 cups chicken stock
- 1/2 cup sliced stuffed green olives
- 1 Tbsp drained capers
- 2 tsp dried basil
- 2 tsp chili powder
- 1 1/2 tsp dried oregano
- 1 bay leaf
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley or cilantro

Directions

1. Preheat the oven to 400°F. Spray a 13- by 9-inch baking dish with cooking oil.

2. Spray a large non-stick skillet with cooking oil, add 2 tsp of the vegetable oil and place over medium heat. Dust the chicken with the flour. Brown on all sides, about 6 minutes. Add to baking dish.

- Remove the fat from the skillet, wipe it clean and re-spray with cooking oil.
- Add the remaining 1 tsp oil along with the garlic, onion and green pepper and cook, for 4 minutes or until softened.
- Stir in the rice, tomatoes, stock, olives, capers, basil, chili powder, oregano and bay leaf.
- Bring to a boil, cook for 1 minute and pour over the chicken. Cover tightly with foil and bake for 30 minutes, stirring a couple of times, until the juices run clear when the leg is pierced at the thickest point and the rice is tender. Garnish with parsley or cilantro.

* IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
Meet up with friends and do things together today. And don't just limit yourself to social activities. Make the world a better place.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
You will get the chance to climb several rungs up the ladder of success over the next few days but there is also a danger that you could slip and fall all the way to the bottom.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Travel and social plans will go well today. News from afar is likely too, perhaps from someone you last saw on less than friendly terms.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Be brutally honest today, both with yourself and with other people. The fact is you don't really care what others think. What you discover over the next 24 hours will affect you profoundly.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
What others are suggesting may sound enticing but before you go along with their plans try to work out what's in it for you and what's in it for them.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You have your doubts about a plan or project that everyone else seems enthusiastic about and if you are smart you will speak up and start a debate.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Do what you feel like doing today and ignore those who say you are doing it wrong or that you should be doing more for other people. The fact is you have done your share and have every right to reward yourself.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Not even a Scorpio can get their own way all the time and you have no option now but to accept that others are calling the shots. Don't waste time complaining.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Go somewhere new and do something different today. The more adventurous you are and the further you travel from your home base the more fun you will have.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
This is generally a positive time for you but you still need to take care where your finances are concerned. Above all you should resist the temptation to spend money on luxuries and other things you know you cannot really afford.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be thinking of starting something new but would it not make more sense to finish what you started a while back first? Today's powerful Sun-Pluto link will help you knock down and get the job done - finally!

Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
You may think that if you don't act fast someone else will beat you to a prize that should have been yours — and maybe you're right, maybe they will — but is it really so important? You don't have to be this competitive.
